Loader Iclass 9696x Pvr. Kevin Johnson USA TODAY Wasting no time in seizing on the uproar over the so-called federal government shutdown, the Republican National Committee has set the stage for what is sure to be a tense fight over the next round of federal borrowing authority, calling Monday for Congress to pass a short-term spending bill while lawmakers work out broader legislation to re-open the government. In an email to members Monday, RNC chief of staff Sean Spicer said, "to provide more time for Senators to work on a solution that can pass both chambers of Congress, we need to give Congress a short-term continuing resolution to fund the government so they have the flexibility to address the situation when they return to Washington." While the RNC had long argued for a full, yearlong extension of the federal borrowing authority, the party now seems to be focusing on a three-month extension, which would give lawmakers time to consider a broader measure that would ease broader long-term budget problems. That could be a more difficult sell with some Senate Republicans who are still uncomfortable with the amount of time that would be required to overhaul the government's financial rules. Other GOP senators, such as Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, are said to be open to passing a short-term bill as long as it is combined with a broader bill that would be necessary to raise the nation's borrowing limit beyond March 1. At the same time, the House Speaker is said to be considering legislation that would delay the start of sequestration — the automatic budget cuts that were approved when the government-spending was capped in 2011 — through March 27. The White House and many GOP lawmakers have argued that the cuts, which are leading to furloughs for hundreds of thousands of federal workers, are too deep and need to be delayed. It's unclear how far Congress would have to go with the short-term funding bill, but senators have previously said that the Democratic and Republican caucuses could approve a measure that would extend the debt ceiling for just three months. "The time is now for all Americans to come together to stop this reckless shutdown, and to stop the threats of default that do so much harm to our economy and our government," Spicer wrote in the RNC email. "Instead, Congress should stop delaying, stop delaying, and pass a short-term CR. It is what America elected the Congress to do." The Treasury Department said Monday that 3da54e8ca3
